

Will the San Leandro Marina look like this?

The picture above shows the Alviso Marina today, after dredging there was curtailed about the time that the San Leandro Marina was opened. Is this the intended gem that the City of San Leandro refers to so often when discussing the Marina project?

Contact your City Council Person and let them know what you think about it!

According to information obtained from someone who was not allowed to open a yacht brokerage in the Marina, the City has decided not to do any further dredging of the Jack D. Maltester Channel or the Marina itself. Since dredging is already overdue to maintain access for the boats of visitors and residents alike, the number of vessels calling San Leandro home will begin to dwindle very quickly in the coming months, as the owners take their boats to other marinas before becoming trapped here.

The City of San Leandro is:

- Turning new businesses away
- Abandoning a major investment
- Allowing a major feature to disappear
- Undermining Homeland Security

Tell the City Manager that you think this is fiscally irresponsible!

Will they also:

- Rename Marina Blvd to Reed Pond Blvd
- Allow the rest of the Marina District to fall into disrepair
- Rename the channel to the Jack D. Maltester Mud Flats
- Allow addicts, gangs, thugs and thieves to inherit the marina area
- Change Marina Park be Mud Side Park
- Convince Horatio's that a mud bowl view is appetizing
- Be able to keep the Marina Inn and what will it be called

Beg Mayor Sheila Young to not let this happen!

Isn't one ghost marina in San Francisco Bay more than enough? Don't let San Leandro throw away one of its finest assets in the mistaken belief that it might save a few dollars (it won't). Don't send these residents and their homes away.

The old vessel on the right depicts clearly how history views the decision Alviso made years ago. Don't let a similar misfortune befall our fair city. Let our leaders know that the citizens of San Leandro want the excitement and camaraderie that comes along with a vibrant, active boating community.
